Historians agree unanimously on the importance Christianity's role in the Arab renaissance in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. However, the Christian contribution to the revival of Arab civilization did not actually start at that time. Rather, it was deeply rooted in the history of the region, wherein they carved, alongside Muslims, the features of our Arab-Islamic culture.

The emergent Islamic civilization. During the caliphate of ʿAbd al-Malik Ibn Marwān (ruled 685–705), which followed the end of the second fitnah, and under his successors during the next four decades, the problematic consequences of the conquests became much more visible. Like their Byzantine and late Sāsānian predecessors, the Marwānid caliphs nominally ruled the various religious communities but allowed the communities' own appointed or elected officials to administer most ...

To be Arab, like American, was (and is) a civilization and a cultural trait rather than a racial mark. To be Arab meant to be from the Arabic-speaking world — a world of common traditions, customs and value — shaped by a single and unifying language. The Arab civilization brought together Muslims, Christians and Jews.

The history of the Arabs begins in the mid-ninth century BC, which is the earliest known attestation of the Old Arabic language. The Arabs appear to have been under the vassalage of the Neo-Assyrian Empire: they went from the Arabian Peninsula to Mauritania. Arab tribes, most notably the Ghassanids and Lakhmids, begin to appear in the southern Syrian Desert from the mid-third century CE onward, during the mid to later stages of the Roman and Sasanian empires. Tradition holds that Arabs descend f
