Welcoming Children with Special Needs

When our congregations have a welcoming spirit and desire to understand and know families impacted by special needs, it makes a huge difference. Another parent, Ali Grimshaw, also from St. Louis, says, “I need to see that people aren’t judging if [my son] wears his headphones or plays with a device in church.

How to Welcome Families with Children with Special Needs

They are welcome but we don’t always know how to welcome them. We want to have a Christ-like attitude and show love and kindness to each child, but we sometimes don’t know what that means. Children with special needs are as different as any group of children and in many ways, it's unfortunate that we label them.

Welcoming Children with Special Needs - Awana

Welcoming children and students with special needs is really not that different than welcoming everyone else in your church. 1. Keep lines of communication open. In order to care for a student with special needs you must be able to communicate well with their family and they must feel comfortable communicating back with you.

Welcoming Children With Special Needs on Any Sunday

Train your volunteers on special needs. Welcoming children with disabilities into your children's and youth programs will require a commitment to the family. Oftentimes volunteers who've never had experience working with people with disabilities might feel hesitant or not equipped to help.
